Nec te DECIPIAT centum nentita figuras,
Sed prome QUICQUID erit. OVID.

Mr. TIMOTHY,

THO' Mr. Wells's anonymous correſpondent ſeems ſo hard puſhed, that it may look ill-natured to endeavour to diſtreſs him any farther, by driving him from his preſent queries, and thereby oblige him, poor man! to ſtart ſtill more, and have recourſe to further ſhifts and evaſions, a thing ſeemingly ſo natural to him, that I really believe he can no more help it than a drowning man can forbear catching at ſtraws; however put him to his trumps, and exerciſe his ſlippery genius once more, I muſt, by making him anſwer the moſt eſſential part of his own queries himſelf; for, as every tittle of the matter in them, relative to the point in diſpute, has been already fully and particularly anſwered by the INHABITANT or myſelf, and "he has not yet diſcovered any reaſon to alter his opinion," tho' he has not made the leaſt attempt to contradict or invalidate any of my arguments, this ſeems to be the only method left me to try with him: But will he even then be convinced, or "inclined to alter his conduct" think you? I trow not.

But firſt permit me to make a few obſervations. At the cloſe of the firſt of his curious epiſtles, he ſays, "to conclude, the diſ-"pute IS BROUGHT TO ONE SINGLE POINT, viz. the meaning of the words MONEY-BILLS."

The pretended right of the council to amend money-bills, he founds on the XIth ſection of the Election-Act, becauſe it ends with theſe words "provided the ſame [powers and privileges] "are ſuch as are according to his Majeſty's XXXVth inſtruction;" by which, he ſays, it adopts that whole inſtruction, and of courſe the clauſe he is ſo very fond of.

'Tis granted that ſection of our act does adopt the XXXVth inſtruction, as far as that inſtruction relates to the whole ſubject it is there applied to; and how can it be made to do more, without confounding all common ways of ſpeaking, or expreſſing our thoughts, ſo as to anſwer the great end of language, that of being underſtood? For ſuppoſe, any writing (call it an inſtruction, edict, or what you pleaſe) ſhould diſtinctly enjoin any matters relating to any TWO ſubjects whatſoever, as, for example, to Engliſhmen and Spaniards, and any law or treaty ſpeaking only of Spaniards ſhould declare that the things there mentioned, in that law or treaty, relative to Spaniards only, were enacted or agreed to, "provided the ſame are ſuch as are according to "that writing;" would any body, but ſuch a writer as this, pretend to ſay, that that law or treaty, mentioning only Spaniards, did, by ſuch reference, adopt the whole of ſuch writing? What related to Engliſhmen ALSO, of which it ſaid not a ſyllable! Are not all declarations or aſſertions confined to the ſubject ſpoken of, and to what may be fairly inferred therefrom, and to nothing elſe? And what confuſion muſt it introduce into language, to apply them to any thing elſe?

That the XXXVth inſtruction relates to the two diſtinct ſubjects I have aſſerted it does, in my laſt, viz. to the commons houſe of aſſembly, AND to the members thereof, this writer (be as impenetrable and obſtinate as he will) muſt allow; becauſe, in one paſſage (at leaſt) of his firſt letter, which I took notice of in my laſt, he expreſſly ſays, "in my opinion, the laſt cited clauſe of the above inſtruction relates to the perſons of the commons houſe ſeparately." What is this, but ſaying, it there relates to the members of the commons houſe ONLY? And in the point contended for by him, "that the council have the like power of framing, mending or altering money-bills as the aſſembly," there can be no diſpute; for that word ASSEMBLY, ALWAYS means the Houſe, & NEVER the members ſeparately, and in this place, I am ſure, he would not chooſe it ſhould mean the members ſeparately. Now the XIth ſection of our election law, wherein alone any mention is made of any inſtruction, does not ſay a ſyllable about the council: But then (to give this writer all poſſible advantages) it may be ſaid, that tho' it do not mention the council expreſsly, or immediately, yet it does by implication or fair conſequence (which is the only pretence he can make) and his arguments in that reſpect might be allowed to have ſome weight, if that ſection DID refer to the commons houſe of aſſembly, becauſe then, by virtue of the legiſlative connection between the commons houſe of aſſembly & the council, the council might ſeem to be included; but ſo altogether unlucky is this writer in his pretenſions, that not one ſyllable is there affirmed or declared, throughout that whole ſection, EVEN of the commons houſe of aſſembly, but of the members of the commons houſe of aſſembly ONLY, who CAN have NO legiſlative connection with the council; therefore (as was made appear more FULLY in my laſt) the reference to the XXXVth inſtruction, cannot, either directly or by fair conſequence, have any thing at all to do with the council or their priviſeges.

After obſerving upon what part of our law this writer had founded the council's pretended claim, and how he had reduced the diſpute to the "one ſingle point" mentioned above; and alſo, after taking notice how he had blamed THE INHABITANT, as "having ſet out with a ſpacious parade," (as he calls it) "of inherent rights or common law, which, however "valuable they may be, are very uſeleſsly urged in the preſent "caſe, as they cannot operate, in any reſpect, to overthrow AN "ACT OF ASSEMBLY;" I was determined to cloſe in with him, and keep to that (our Election-Act) and the XXXVth inſtruction ONLY, which I did ſtrictly, throughout ALL that part of my letter relative to money-bills, in order to leave NO room for his expected evaſions. After my having thus taken this writer at his word, what, but a meer Proteus-like diſpoſition, could induce him to begin his laſt letter with this, what ſhall I call it? Evaſion? 'Tis more! "The OPPOSERS of what I have "advanced concerning the rights of the council dwell much "on the inherent rights of Engliſhmen, as if THAT would give "them a right to make LAWS."? THAT (dwelling much) on any point, can never alone prove it, muſt be granted; but whoever does ſo, is in a much fairer way of doing it, than a writer who will not dwell AT ALL upon it, even though fixed by himſelf: And, with regard to this writer, the preſent is a moſt glaring inſtance; for, firſt, is the point in diſpute about "making laws" in general? Is it not about the framing, mending, &c. money-bills in particular? Again, it is not whether Engliſhmen, when conſtituted into aſſemblies, have this particular right that is not even pretended to be denied; but 'tis, whether the council have ſuch a right, founded on the XIth clauſe of our election-act, adopting the whole of the XXXVth inſtruction as this writer pretends. This only is the queſtion, and ought to be kept to: And in debating this point, did I ſay one ſingle word about the inherent rights of Engliſhmen, or any thing the leaſt tending that way, before I had thoroughly diſcuſſed the only proper point in diſpute with him, ſtated in the very words of the XXXVth inſtruction itſelf? Did I not ſubmit entirely to his pleaſure, and expreſsly agree with him, in his own words too, that an inſtruction, tho' not of itſelf binding on the people, was ſo, if confirmed by a law? Did I reaſon from any thing elſe but our Election-Act and the XXXVth inſtruction, from my firſt ſetting out, and all along afterwards, during the whole courſe of that argument, 'till I had ſaid every tittle I had to ſay upon it? whether to the purpoſe or no, that the reader muſt judge; I think, it was.

Now, ſurely, after being heartily fatigued, ſweated and jaded, with thus clearing and removing ſo much heavy lumber, which he had thrown before the door, I had a right to peep out, get a mouthful of wholeſome, freſh air, and look about me; and what could there be then to hinder me? But clearly ſeeing whom I had to deal with, I only indulged myſelf with one ſingle general glance at the inherent rights of Engliſhmen, without diſtinguiſhing any in particular; and, ſurely, this writer cannot but allow, we have SOME: Was this "dwelling MUCH on the inherent "rights of Engliſhmen?" juſt, barely once, to glance, and that generally, at them, only in theſe words, "that we had not by "any act renounced or deprived ourſelves of any of thoſe "valuable privileges we have an inherent right to as Engliſh-"men?" What could this (or any) writer have deſired more of an oppoſer, if his end had been really truth, and "to preſerve "peace and prevent diſcord," as he ſet out with ſeeming to pretend was the ſole motive of "an honeſt and well meaning "man in a public ſtation"? (apparently meaning himſelf.) Did he not ſtart theſe publications himſelf? Does he think, right or wrong, the aſſembly ought to give up that eſſential privilege? Or, at all events, does he judge it ſafer for the council, that the matter be carried home? for "unleſs one party "gives way to the other" HE SAYS, "the matter cannot be determined here."

I am alſo ſure the INHABITANT, who alone has dwelt much upon the inherent rights of Engliſhmen, hath no where ſaid "that (ſhould be they, or thoſe if referring to rights) would give them a right in America to make laws;" they muſt firſt be formed or conſtituted into legal aſſemblies; which grand and leading principle of the conſtitution they have an inherent right as Engliſhmen to expect, or at leaſt to be repreſented ſomewhere; and with regard to this that perſon tells us, "It is CERTAIN "the conſtitution of the Britiſh colonies IS founded & modelled by "the crown; but it is, and muſt, be done in as near a conformity "as poſſible to the mother-country: the king alſo grants powers "under the great ſeal, to make laws, which, being warranted "by the conſtitution, is extremely proper and neceſſary." And notwithſtanding this writer, in his ſecond letter ſeemed ſo much diſpleaſed with one "honeſt and well-meaning" word of this paſſage, the word [muſt] as even CAPITALLY to expoſe it; yet, whoever reads his two firſt queries with any attention, will find, if he there mean any thing, that meaning, though not "ſtrictly conformable," yet very far from being "directly repugnant" to the INHABITANT's above expreſſed. But why this ſhuffling backwards and forwards? Hath not this nice diſtinguiſhing gentleman declared himſelf, that the diſpute is reduced to "one ſingle point?" and that relative to money-bills, one particular kind of laws? and what has that to do, as I ſaid before, with laws in general? Is not this an old ſtale trick, and conſtant practice of all evaſive diſputants, who contend for victory, not truth, when they find themſelves gravelled, thus to ſkulk from particulars to generals? 'Tis a very eaſy matter to come off in any diſpute, by ſuch artifice; but not in the opinion of a judicious candid reader.

If the council can find no better champions to juſtify them (whoever they may expect will ſupport them) I verily believe, to uſe the words of the INHABITANT, this point, if it comes to a diſpute, like many others on the ſame thing heretofore, "will "not terminate either to their honour or credit," but only "tend to embaraſs and retard public buſineſs," and again to diſtreſs the people.

Though it could not be neceſſary but with ſuch a diſputant, yet, upon that account only, in order to avoid any more ſlippery turns, let me here acknowledge in form, that I did vary from his ſtating the "one ſingle point" in diſpute, "the MEANING of the words money-bills. But then, was not that variation neceſſary, natural, and unexceptionable, and he acquainted therewith at my firſt ſetting out? For, can the meaning of any thing be, with any propriety, inquired into, before its exiſtence is firſt aſcertained? Nay, is it not abſurd and impertinent to attempt it? Now in the courſe of my proving (which I hope I have, and think I have a right to ſay too, to this writer, becauſe he has not attempted to contradict me, but only ſaid, what any body may ſay, "he is not convinced.)" I ſay, in the courſe of my proving, that our Election-Law hath not adopted that part of the inſtruction relating to money-bills, contended for by the council, the reader of my laſt may judge whether I have made uſe of any cavilling or ſtraining whatever, and whether I have not there kept ſtrictly and cloſely to that point, and to that only? and I promiſe him, to keep as cloſely and ſtrictly to "the MEANING of money-bills," which will very properly be the next and only queſtion, ſuppoſing the arguments on the preſent are diſproved; and I aſſure this writer beſides, that I will not tell him "I am not convinced," without giving at leaſt ſome reaſon why I am not: In ſhort, I ſhould be aſhamed to do ſo, and much more ſhould I be aſhamed, to ſplit the ſubſtance of the ſame queſtion, when once fully diſcuſſed, into ſix or any number of others, or to fly to any general head, when particularly pinched, which can only ſerve to deceive very ignorant or inattentive readers indeed, and procure the reſentment of others of judgment (who muſt quickly ſee through the cunning ſubterfuge) for thus attempting to impoſe upon them. This point, about money-bills, the council, by often renewing, at convenient times, their chimerical pretenſions, have thereby made of the utmoſt conſequence to the province, for a number of years paſt, and therefore abſolutely neceſſary to be finally ſettled, in order "to preſerve peace and prevent diſcord" amongſt the legiſlative branches for the future, and ought to be treated, by every "honeſt and well-meaning man" and true lover of his country, that attempts the ſubject, with the utmoſt plainneſs, cloſeneſs, and ſincerity; or, how is it poſſible, that "theſe publications" can be of any "uſe to inform the pub-"lic, of the foundation each houſe hath to ſupport its claims, "which many might" were it not for them, this writer ſays, "be entirely unacquainted with"?

After this preface, let me, according to my promiſe, attempt to make this writer anſwer the moſt material of his ſix queries himſelf.

QUERY 1ſt. "Whether the power of making laws in the "American colonies, is not derived from the crown only?"

QUERY 2d. "Whether the crown may not, with propriety, "point out the particular rights of each branch of the "legiſlature, in framing of laws, SO THAT ſuch rights be "not DIRECTLY REPUGNANT, though not STRICT-"LY conformable to the USAGE of the mother country?"

ANSWER. Theſe two queries, however inconſiſtent (as they certainly are) muſt be taken together, if calculated for an Engliſh meridian in any degree; and then, are ſo far from making any thing in his favour, that, on the contrary, they are entirely and ſtrikingly againſt him: For, only ſuppoſe they are granted him; what then? the point, the ſingle point, I ſay, at preſent in diſpute (which I only wiſh this writer had kept to; however, though he has not, I will) as claimed by the council, is not only, "not STRICTLY con-"formable to the USAGE of the mother country," with regard to the houſe of lords, whom they pretend to imitate, but well known to be "DIRECTLY repugnant thereto;" And this writer certainly will not pretend to deny ſo notorious a fact? and therefore "the crown may not, with any propriety, point out the particular rights of the council" as in the preſent caſe pretended.

QUERY 3d. "Whether the plain words in the XXXVth "inſtruction where the council is named, do intend any "thing concerning them as a branch of the legiſlature, "and what?"

ANSWER. Yes, the words of that inſtruction do concern them as a branch of the legiſlature: and they DO enjoin, "that the council have the like power of framing, &c. money-bills, as the aſſembly." WHAT money-bills may mean, is altogether foreign from the preſent point; but mean WHAT they will, has not this letter writer himſelf told us this happy conſtitutional truth, that "an in-"ſtruction from the crown to a governor in America, IS ſo, nor CAN of itſelf be, binding on the PEOPLE, but on him ONLY to whom it is given."

QUERY 4th. "Whether what is there" [in the XXXVth inſtruction] "ſaid of the aſſembly, means the members SE-"PARATELY, or as a houſe?"

ANSWER. What I have made this writer reply to his laſt query, will fully do here too: However I hope the candid reader will not think me impertinent in obſerving a little upon the penning of this moſt profound query. How evaſively and artfully are the terms there confounded! They are not ſo in the injunctive, the only binding part, of the XXXVth inſtruction; but the aſſembly there (and indeed every where elſe) means the aſſembly or commons houſe, as clearly and diſtinctly as 'tis poſſible for words to make them. DOES "what is there ſaid "of the aſſembly mean the members SEPARATELY?" Does the whole mean a part, Mr. Writer? For ſhame, theſe artful blunders and ſubterfuges will not take: Keep to the point, and that only, if truth is your object; and, if poſſible, endeavour to impoſe no longer on your readers, by ſuch low unmanly artifices. And here give me leave to aſk this writer, if I have invented the diſtinction I have ſo much inſiſted upon, that between the houſe and its members? Is it not a diſtinction that has always ſubſiſted, and muſt always ſubſiſt, as long as our conſtitution exiſts? And are not their powers and privileges, alſo known to be diſtinct and ſeparate? Upon this conſtitutional diſtinction the whole diſpute with this writer turns; and, as I have already ſaid more than once, and ſay again, the injunctive part of the XXXVth inſtruction, as well as our Election-Law, make and keep cloſe to this diſtinction. Does not this ſhew, the diſtreſs this writer muſt have been in, and to what a dilemma he muſt have been reduced, when he was penning this very ingenious and critical query? either of being obliged to acknowledge himſelf convinced, mortifying thought! or to confound the terms, and in the very fit of it, perplex the diſpute, and this is the beſt apology that can be made for ſuch unaccountable ſhifts.

QUERY 5th. "Whether the Election-Law does not confirm "the whole of the XXXVth inſtruction?

ANSWER. No: That inſtruction, by this writer's own opinion (and it certainly does) enjoins matters concerning "the perſons of the commons houſe ſeparately," and alſo "THE ASSEMBLY;" (and where too, Mr. Writer, you CANNOT, by "what is THERE ſaid of the aſſembly, mean THE MEMBERS SEPARATELY,") TWO diſtinct ſubjects. But the XIth ſection of that law, containing the reference to that inſtruction, (by your own acknowledgement too,) "relates to the power and privileges of THE MEM-BERS of the commons," but ONE, and that the leaſt extenſive in ſignification of THOSE ſubjects: Therefore (need I draw the concluſion) it cannot adopt the whole of that inſtruction, either directly, or by fair inference.

QUERY 6th. "Whether under the proprietors, their de-"puties, as a part of the general aſſembly, had not a voice "in framing money-bills?"

ANSWER. "If the COUNCIL have at any time waved or "ſuſpended their powers, as indeed they often have, they ever "did it to ſerve the province, by putting a ſtop to contentions; "for which they have deſerved both credit and honour; nor "CAN theſe condeſcentions, without great injuſtice, be made uſe "of, as precedents, to deprive them, or ſucceſſors, of the EXER-"CISE of ANY of the powers the King has been pleaſed to "entruſt them with, confirmed by law." Now, I ONLY beg leave here to ſubſtitute two words for two others, the word "aſſembly" for "council," and the word "people" for "king;" I plead this in equity, what this writer ought not to be unacquainted with; and then, with only this ſmall equitable alteration, this laſt query will alſo be fully anſwered by the writer himſelf. This puts me in mind, that when I was a child I was very fond of playing at cards, right hand againſt left: a pretty childiſh amuſement that! mightily reſembling I think this "honeſt and well-meaning man's" writing, for himſelf and againſt himſelf, and which impartial manner of diverſion, no doubt he choſe, in order to make it as innocent too. But let me add, by the bye, that I heartily acquieſce in this writer's reaſoning in this laſt inſtance, and hope, no advantages will be taken, on either ſide, of any temporary wavings or ſuſpenſions of any legal or conſtitutional rights whatever, and then we muſt be an happy people; for we are bleſt with the beſt and moſt envied conſtitution under the ſun (an almoſt divine one) and the cloſer we keep to it, and the more we ſtudy its excellent prin-

CHARLES-TOWN, December 25. 1764.

BY Capt. Mason, just arrived from Philadelphia, we have the following very agreeable and interesting intelligence, viz. That "the expedition into the Indian country, "under Col. Bouquet, had had the desired "effect, the Mingoes, Delaware and Shawanese nations, after a long struggle, "having at last submitted to the terms that "were prescribed to them, to wit.

"1st. To deliver up all their prisoners without exception.

"2dly. To give fourteen hostages, to remain in our hands, "as a security for the strict performance of the foregoing article; and that they shall commit no hostilities against his "Majesty's subjects.

"That upon these conditions they are permitted to send deputies from each nation to Sir William Johnson, to make "their peace.—That the Mingoes have given two hostages, the "Delawares six, and the Shawanese six.—That the Indians "had already brought in 200 prisoners, and 100 more were daily "expected in Col. Bouquet's camp at Muskingham, when Major "Small, who brought these advices left it, the 18th of November.—That the Indians were in the greatest conceivable "distress, being destitute not only of ammunition, but also of "provisions and leathern cloathing; and had submitted to deliver "up even their children by white women.—That all the troops "were healthy, had behaved well, and were expected at Pittsburg the 2d instant."

The snow Tryal, Capt. Clapp, with Palatines, arrived at Philadelphia the 1st instant.

The New-York papers of the 2d, say, That Sir William Johnson proposed to invite the chiefs of every nation of Indians to his hall, this winter, on business of great importance to England and the people of America; in which it was hoped he would succeed.

By the Rhode-Island papers of the 8th instant, we find, That the general assembly of that colony, before it rose ordered an address, which had been before prepared by a committee, to be sent to his Majesty; praying, that their trade may be restored to its former condition; that the courts of admiralty in the colonies may not have more extensive powers than the laws give them in Great-Britain; that stamp-duties and internal taxes be not laid on the people there, but with their own consent; and that the colonies be not deprived of their just and long enjoyed rights.—They also caused a large piece, drawn by the said committee, tending to illustrate the rights of the colonists, to be printed and published.

Several vessels have been lost on and near the Northern coasts of this continent, and many suffered great damage, in a storm which happened on the 24th and 25th days of last month.

The Rev. Mr. Whitefield arrived at Savannah in Georgia the 9th instant, and on the sunday following preached in the church there.

The substance of the latest intelligence from London, to the 16th of October, is,

"That his grace William Cavendish, duke of Devonshire, died at his German Spa the 3d of that month, aged 44; and by a codicil to his will, written with his own hand, had left 5000l. to General Conway.

"That a great number of hands are employed in all his Majesty's yards, to fit out men of war; and 25,000 seamen will be kept in pay in time of peace, merely to prevent either becoming useless, and to secure respect to the British flag.

"That the parliament of Great-Britain was prorogued to the 10th of January.

"That a certain popular gentleman who was supposed to be confined to fricasees and soup-maigre abroad, had been largely seen to dine at an intimate friend's house in Surry,

"That it was whispered, a full greater personage than had hitherto joined the minority, had put himself at the head of those unplaced patriots.

"That count La Lippe, commander in chief of his Portuguese Majesty's forces, was returned to England, loaded with honours and presents.

"That every thing was quiet in Poland. And,

"That the French, Spaniards, Dutch and Portuguese, all pay the utmost attention to the encreasing and putting their marine in good order.

Thursday the 13th instant, Henry Smith, Esq; was married to Miss Elizabeth Ball, daughter of the late Mr. John Cuming Ball, of St. John's parish in Berkley county.

On monday last died, Mr. Robert Mackewn, jun. And

On tuesday, at his plantation on John's-Island, Col. John Gibbes, a native of this province, aged 69 years.

The price of RICE, is the same as in our last: And there is scarce any variation in the price of any other article of produce.

Many ADVERTISEMENTS, which we have taken the liberty to leave out, will have the better places in our next.

CORRIE, SCOTT, & CARSAN,

Have juſt imported, in the Diana, Capt. Cheeſman, from LONDON, and the laſt veſſels from BRISTOL and GLASGOW,

A Large and compleat aſſortment of European and Eaſt-India goods, choſen by John Corrie, and bought on the beſt terms; To be ſold very reaſonably, at their ſtore in Tradd-ſtreet, lately poſſeſſed by Meſſrs. Daniel Legaré, jun. & Company.

ciples and reduce them to practice, the more politically happy we muſt be, while, we by its ſhelter are and can be drawn only by the cords of a man, millions of our fellow-creatures, under different conſtitutions, are treated worſe than brute beaſts. But here it may be very neceſſary to conſider, whether upon the "waving or ſuſpending" of any privileges, on either ſide, it be more eaſy for the aſſembly of any province, or the council, to reſume them again: The one have the lords of trade, and the miniſtry (who, as well as themſelves, are all ſervants of the crown) to back and ſupport them: The other have only themſelves to depend upon; and in what diſputes, tho' the eſſential rights of the people were ever ſo manifeſt, have they lately got A board of trade explicitly to acknowledge, and put out of farther danger of unconſtitutional attempts? ſo that, upon the whole, tho' this writer's reaſoning, upon this matter, is certainly good in equity, yet, I hope, none of our aſſemblies will ever be ſo imprudent as actually to "wave or ſuſpend" any more of the people's rights, at leaſt, before they have exerciſed all at preſent in that ſituation.

As I have the honour, Mr. Timothy, to be one of the repreſentatives of this province, therefore, particularly, whilſt I act in that ſtation, I cannot, indeed I dare not, look on with indifference, and ſee any, eſpecially the moſt valuable of the people's rights invaded, or endeavoured to be undermined, or ſlily ſtole from them, by any man or ſet of men, in or out of "a public ſtation," without doing my duty, and offering my mite to their aſſiſtance, whatever apology it may ſometimes be neceſſary to make for ſo doing. The candid, the honeſt, the undeſigning alone I am ſolicitous of pleaſing; indeed, it would give me great pain, to hear that any but ſuch commended me: The cenſures of all others, I would much rather be complimented with. I am far from wanting, as this writer ſeems to inſinuate, "to amuſe and "obtain applauſe of thoſe who are zealous to advance the rights "and powers of the aſſembly, and would depreſs thoſe of the "council;" I have not a wiſh to ſee the aſſembly's powers advanced one tittle beyond the plaineſt limits of our happy (I may ſay happieſt) conſtitution; God forbid they ſhould be! But ſo far, I confeſs, I wiſh to ſee them maintained; and that every material, conſtitutional right, though ever ſo long "waved and "ſuſpended," were again exerciſed: and the ſame I wiſh for the council; but ſhould be glad, for the information of my ignorance, and that of a few friends, who confeſs themſelves in the ſame ſituation, to have the peruſal of a good treatiſe on all the council's conſtitutional rights in America, in order to know, for certain, what, and how many, they are, and how they came by them: I have never heard of, or ſeen, ſuch a piece hitherto; but I am very ſure there is ſubject enough already for as curious a one, in ſeveral reſpects, as that of St. Peter's holy ſucceſſors. May their uncertain, growing power, never make their hiſtory, in future generations, in any inſtance, appear as arbitrary and tragical to the people. Perhaps it has never been thought prudent to publiſh ſuch a hiſtory, leſt it ſhould ſeem to fix their political ſtandard, and thereby prevent their gaining, in time, ALL the moſt valuable privileges of aſſemblies, and ſubſtituting themſelves altogether in their room, or ſo much as to have no occaſion for aſſemblies, but as clerks merely, to ſave themſelves the trouble of ſettling the public accompts, to be paid, or not paid, by themſelves afterwards, as they, in their wiſdom, may think proper. But, probably, after all, the difficulty of aſcertaining, with any degree of exactneſs, their legiſlative powers, may have deterred all political writers, hitherto, from attempting ſo arduous an undertaking: They certainly, in order to be clearly ſeen, ought to be adjuſted by ſome graduated Politico-Meter, calculated to riſe and fall, in nice proportion to the folly, credulity, neceſſity, and indolence, of aſſemblies they have had, or may have, to do with, and of courſe be greater in ſome colonies, and at ſome times, than others. As to the people's rights (including Americans) the main ſtrong lines thereof are, and have been the ſame for time immemorial, but have been more particularly pointed out and eſtabliſhed ſince the happy revolution, and are eaſily aſcertained, being founded on well-known conſtitutional principles and acts of parliament, as well as on reaſon, and the nature of things; and, to aſſiſt our judgment, we may have recourſe to many excellent Engliſh writers, on the liberties of the people. The few trifling alterations, if any, made, ſince the revolution, are local only, and not to their diſadvantage; except a very late unexpected ſtroke upon them, from an auguſt body they always thought their beſt and moſt intereſted friends, as being embarked on the ſame rational, conſtitutional foundation, and differing ONLY as a greater circle from a leſs; but this is generally imagined to have taken its riſe from miſrepreſentations of the colonies, which, upon a re-conſideration, 'tis as generally hoped will blow over; if it does not, there is no reſiſting power: but ſtill power and right certainly mean not the ſame thing (and, thank God, we may yet ſay ſo) nor does giving up and taking away either; the one may not be in an aſſembly's power to prevent, and therefore they muſt be juſtified; the other, that of giving up a privilege, [they have no right to do, the people never delegated ſuch a power to them; and it muſt be nothing but downright ſhort-ſighted knavery to attempt it.

A fair and candid diſputant, Mr. Timothy, deſerves the tendereſt treatment: And any little undeſigned ſlips that may have eſcaped him, when it appears plainly his whole intentions are to ſerve the public, the humane, good-natured, ſenſible reader, conſcious of his own infirmities, cannot but overlook. But when plain and evident ſhuffings and evaſions are made uſe of, in order to avoid the force of truth, which alone can make us free and happy, by a writer pretending to give his thoughts upon an important ſubject, eſſential to the happineſs of any people, let him act in what "public ſtation" he may, deſerves contempt, and the higher his ſtation, ſo much the more.—When too ſuch a writer STARTS ſuch a ſubject HIMSELF, with an introduction of this ſort, "It is poſſible an ho-"neſt and well-meaning man, in a public ſtation, may, and "often does err, for want of knowing ſome facts relative to "his duty, which, when informed of, may incline him to alter "his conduct, and thereby preſerve peace and prevent diſcord, "which is ever prejudicial to ſome, and often to many, in the "ſtate;" what can we call it, but mere grimace and ſpecious political cant, proceeding from the mouth only?

Unleſs this writer will keep to his point, I declare, once for all, let him ſay what he will, neither the public nor yourſelf ſhall be troubled any farther on it from Your's, &c.

ciples and reduce them to practice, the more politically happy we muſt be, while, we by its ſhelter are and can be drawn only by the cords of a man, millions of our fellow-creatures, under different conſtitutions, are treated worſe than brute beaſts. But here it may be very neceſſary to conſider, whether upon the "waving or ſuſpending" of any privileges, on either ſide, it be more eaſy for the aſſembly of any province, or the council, to reſume them again: The one have the lords of trade, and the miniſtry (who, as well as themſelves, are all ſervants of the crown) to back and ſupport them: The other have only themſelves to depend upon; and in what diſputes, tho' the eſſential rights of the people were ever ſo manifeſt, have they lately got A board of trade explicitly to acknowledge, and put out of farther danger of unconſtitutional attempts? ſo that, upon the whole, tho' this writer's reaſoning, upon this matter, is certainly good in equity, yet, I hope, none of our aſſemblies will ever be ſo imprudent as actually to "wave or ſuſpend" any more of the people's rights, at leaſt, before they have exerciſed all at preſent in that ſituation.

As I have the honour, Mr. Timothy, to be one of the repreſentatives of this province, therefore, particularly, whilſt I act in that ſtation, I cannot, indeed I dare not, look on with indifference, and ſee any, eſpecially the moſt valuable of the people's rights invaded, or endeavoured to be undermined, or ſlily ſtole from them, by any man or ſet of men, in or out of "a public ſtation," without doing my duty, and offering my mite to their aſſiſtance, whatever apology it may ſometimes be neceſſary to make for ſo doing. The candid, the honeſt, the undeſigning alone I am ſolicitous of pleaſing; indeed, it would give me great pain, to hear that any but ſuch commended me: The cenſures of all others, I would much rather be complimented with. I am far from wanting, as this writer ſeems to inſinuate, "to amuſe and "obtain applauſe of thoſe who are zealous to advance the rights "and powers of the aſſembly, and would depreſs thoſe of the "council:" I have not a wiſh to ſee the aſſembly's powers advanced one tittle beyond the plaineſt limits of our happy (I may ſay happieſt) conſtitution; God forbid they ſhould be! But ſo far, I confeſs, I wiſh to ſee them maintained; and that every material, conſtitutional right, though ever ſo long "waved and "ſuſpended," were again exerciſed: and the ſame I wiſh for the council; but ſhould be glad, for the information of my ignorance, and that of a few friends, who confeſs themſelves in the ſame ſituation, to have the peruſal of a good treatiſe on all the council's conſtitutional rights in America, in order to know, for certain, what, and how many, they are, and how they came by them: I have never heard of, or ſeen, ſuch a piece hitherto; but I am very ſure there is ſubject enough already for as curious a one, in ſeveral reſpects, as that of St. Peter's holy ſucceſſors. May their uncertain, growing power, never make their hiſtory, in future generations, in any inſtance, appear as arbitrary and tragical to the people. Perhaps it has never been thought prudent to publiſh ſuch a hiſtory, leſt it ſhould ſeem to fix their political ſtandard, and thereby prevent their gaining, in time, ALL the moſt valuable privileges of aſſemblies, and ſubſtituting themſelves altogether in their room, or ſo much as to have no occaſion for aſſemblies, but as clerks merely, to ſave themſelves the trouble of ſettling the public accompts, to be paid, or not paid, by themſelves afterwards, as they, in their wiſdom, may think proper. But, probably, after all, the difficulty of aſcertaining, with any degree of exactneſs, their legiſlative powers, may have deterred all political writers, hitherto, from attempting ſo arduous an undertaking: They certainly, in order to be clearly ſeen, ought to be adjuſted by ſome graduated Politico-Meter, calculated to riſe and fall, in nice proportion to the folly, credulity, neceſſity, and indolence, of aſſemblies they have had, or may have, to do with, and of courſe be greater in ſome colonies, and at ſome times, than others. As to the people's rights (including Americans) the main ſtrong lines thereof are, and have been the ſame for time immemorial, but have been more particularly pointed out and eſtabliſhed ſince the happy revolution, and are eaſily aſcertained, being founded on well-known conſtitutional principles and acts of parliament, as well as on reaſon, and the nature of things; and, to aſſiſt our judgment, we may have recourſe to many excellent Engliſh writers, on the liberties of the people. The few trifling alterations, if any, made, ſince the revolution, are local only, and not to their diſadvantage; except a very late unexpected ſtroke upon them, from an auguſt body they always thought their beſt and moſt intereſted friends, as being embarked on the ſame rational, conſtitutional foundation, and differing ONLY as a greater circle from a leſs; but this is generally imagined to have taken its riſe from miſrepreſentations of the colonies, which, upon a re-conſideration, 'tis as generally hoped will blow over; if it does not, there is no reſiſting power: but ſtill power and right certainly mean not the ſame thing (and, thank God, we may yet ſay ſo) nor does giving up and taking away either; the one may not be in an aſſembly's power to prevent, and therefore they muſt be juſtified; the other, that of giving up a privilege, [they have no right to do, the people never delegated ſuch a power to them; and it muſt be nothing but downright ſhort-ſighted knavery to attempt it.

A fair and candid diſputant, Mr. Timothy, deſerves the tendereſt treatment: And any little undeſigned ſlips that may have eſcaped him, when it appears plainly his whole intentions are to ſerve the public, the humane, good-natured, ſenſible reader, conſcious of his own infirmities, cannot but overlook. But when plain and evident ſhufflings and evaſions are made uſe of, in order to avoid the force of truth, which alone can make us free and happy, by a writer pretending to give his thoughts upon an important ſubject, eſſential to the happineſs of any people, let him act in what "public ſtation" he may, deſerves contempt, and the higher his ſtation, ſo much the more. —When too ſuch a writer STARTS ſuch a ſubject HIMSELF, with an introduction of this ſort, "It is poſſible an ho-"neſt and well-meaning man, in a public ſtation, may, and "often does err, for want of knowing ſome facts relative to "his duty, which, when informed of, may incline him to alter "his conduct, and thereby preſerve peace and prevent diſcord, "which is ever prejudicial to ſome, and often to many, in the "ſtate;" what can we call it, but mere grimace and ſpecious political cant, proceeding from the mouth only?

Unleſs this writer will keep to his point, I declare, once for all, let him ſay what he will, neither the public nor yourſelf ſhall be troubled any further on it from Your's, &c.
